The Arabian oryx, also called the white oryx, was extinct in the wild as of 1972, but was reintroduced to the wild starting in 1982. Initial reintroduction was primarily from two herds: the "World Herd" originally started at the Phoenix Zoo in 1963 from only nine oryx and the Saudi Arabian herd started in 1986 from private collections and some "World Herd" stock by the Saudi National Wildlife Research Center. As of 2009 there have been reintroductions in Oman, Saudi Arabia, Israel, the United Ar

In 1972 it became extinct in the wild, but was saved by zoos and private reserves, and reintroduced into the wild from 1980, and, as a result, wild populations now live in Israel, Saudi Arabia and Oman, and with current additional reintroduction programs taking place, it is likely that this range will expand into other countries of the Arabian Peninsula. Arabian oryx inhabit the deserts and arid plains of Arabia, where temperatures can reach 50°C even in the shade during summer.

Mark has had a long association with the theory and practice of reintroduction. This started with the 1982 release of the Arabian oryx into Oman, using captive-bred animals to replace the last indigenous population which had been hunted to extinction in 1972. From 1988 to 2000 he was founder Chair of the IUCN SSC Reintroduction Specialist Group.

The Arabian oryx or white oryx is a medium-sized antelope with a distinct shoulder bump, long, straight horns, and a tufted tail. It is a bovid, and the smallest member of the genus Oryx, native to desert and steppe areas of the Arabian Peninsula. The Arabian oryx was extinct in the wild by the early 1970s, but was saved in zoos and private preserves, and was reintroduced into the wild starting in 1980. In 1986, the Arabian oryx was classified as endangered on the IUCN Red List, and in 2011, it
