Matter moves in a different way than how energy moves. Thus, unlike the one-way flow of energy, matter is recycled within and between ecosystems. Elements that pass through from one organism to the other in closed loops is called biogeochemical cycles. This cycle involves biological process, geological process, and chemical process. Human activities also play a significant role in biogeochemical ...

Consequently, ecologists say that matter cycles through ecosystems. Scientists track the recycling of atoms through cycles called biogeochemical cycles. Because the element carbon forms the backbone of the molecules that make up cells, one of the most important biogeochemical cycles to life on Earth is the carbon cycle.

These cycles are called biogeochemical cycles because they are cycles of chemicals that include both organisms (bio) and abiotic components such as the ocean or rocks (geo). As matter moves through a biogeochemical cycle, it may be held for various periods of time in different components of the cycle.

Figure 20.11 Carbon dioxide gas exists in the atmosphere and is dissolved in water. Photosynthesis converts carbon dioxide gas into organic carbon, and respiration cycles the organic carbon back into carbon dioxide gas. Long-term storage of organic carbon occurs when matter from living organisms is buried deep underground and becomes fossilized.
