In Domesticity at War, Beatriz Colomina shows how postwar American architecture adapted the techniques and materials that were developed for military applications to domestic use. Just as manufacturers were turning wartime industry to peacetime productivity—going from missiles to washing machines—American architects and cultural institutions were, in Buckminster Fuller's words, turning "weaponry into livingry." This new form of domesticity itself turned out to be a powerful weapon.

Book review: Domesticity at War - We Make Money Not Art

Domesticity at War. by. Beatriz Colomina. 4.10 · Rating details · 30 ratings · 5 reviews. When American architects, designers, and cultural institutions converted wartime strategies to new ends, the aggressive promotion of postwar domestic bliss became another kind of weapon. In the years immediately following World War II, America embraced modern architecture--not as something imported from Europe, but as an entirely new mode of operation, with original and cap.

Domesticity at War Beatriz Colomina We are always on the edge of war. On the threshold. A line has been drawn. Literally. In crossing that line we go to war. We go outside. We leave the homeland and do battle on the outside. But there are always lines in the interior, within the apparent safe confines of the house. Even before we step outside we are Cold War anxieties were masked by endlessly repeated images of a picture-perfect domestic environment. Even the popular conception of the architect became domesticated, changing from that of an austere modernist to a plaid-shirt wearing homebody. Colomina examines, with interlocking case studies and an army of images, the embattled and obsessive domesticity of postwar America.
