to show that whatever separation exists between humans and nature exists to be crossed.

The Organic Machine: The Remaking of the Columbia River ...

Prizewinning University of Washington historian White's "organic machine" is the Columbia River and its tributaries: along this energy powerhouse, Native American fishermen and eastern adventurers, spawning salmon and man-made machines--from gill nets and fish wheels to hydroelectric dams and Hanford Engineer Works--came together to forge "a new energy regime, a new geography, and a new relationship between human labor and the energy of nature."

The Organic Machine: The Remaking of the Columbia River ...

Richard White skillfully analyzes the
