Running and Philosophy is a collection of essays from various university professors (usually Philosophy professors) pertaining to, well, running and philosophy. The book doesn't delve very deep into one area of philosophy; instead, the chapters or loosely grouped up based on the philosophical ideas they explore. e.g. aesthetics, philosophy of mind, existentialism, virtue ethics, philosophy of religion, and more.

Philosophy is the key word in the title. I'm not a philosophic guy generally speaking. The book is made up of many different philosophical view points and then they are equated to running. I think it would be an outstanding resource if I find myself taking Philosophy 101 and have to show how philosophy can effect my daily life.
