Sour Sweet (1982) - Timothy MO. When Timothy Mo's new book, Pure, came out last year, I was intrigued by its premise. Doing some more research on him, I discovered that he had actually been shortlisted for the Man Booker several times in the 80s, and yet none of his books are still available through a major publisher.

Mo has a good sense of humor and a heart-warming way with characters. This tale of a Chinese family in England is at times a good series of lessons on Chinese culture. Somewhat clumsily (at times) juxtaposing triad gang strife with the struggle of a family to succeed, Mo weaves a story that is fun to read. Mo is a master craftsman of dialogue.

In his second novel, Sour Sweet (1982), Mr. Mo is still concerned with Confucianism and its central tenant, that family relations (xiao, filial deference) are paradigmatic for all subsequent social relations and that human values are first experienced and most deeply explored in the context of family life. Mr. Mo's concern in his first novel was to clarify this as the continuing foundation on which Chinese culture rests as it experiences the onrush of Western, modern culture and to ...

Sour Sweet is a less optimistic, more mature work than The Monkey King and remains for many the quintessential Mo novel, securing his reputation as a writer. Mo's next two novels, An Insular Possession (1986) and The Redundancy of Courage (1991), represent some of the author's most ambitious and experimental work to date, and it is a shame that they have not received the same critical attention as Booker shortlisted Sour Sweet. An Insular Possession is perhaps Mo's least 'insular ...
